They claimed that the money was due them, and a row followed when Mrs. Cheraro refused their demand and said that she owed them nothing.

Amelia, the daughter of Mrs. Cherago, satisfied the room while the dispute was at its height, and took her mother's part. The woman Asunda pulled a revolver from under her civiling and shot Amelia dead. The men also used pistols, and Mrs. Cherago and a younger daughter were seriously wounded.

Asunda was arrested by the police of the Oak street station-house, but the men effected their escape.

master-General had thought seriously of the succession.

At the same time he did not believe he would declare as a candidate at this time, but would bide his time, although it is probable that in the near future his friends would make their influence felt.

He further thought that it was unlikely that Mr. Wanamaker in any event would be a candidate in the general acceptation of the term, as he considers that the office is one that should come to a man as a high honor, and not be obtained by the usual political masthods.

Mr. Wanamaker himself said to the same reporter: "I do not talk politics on Sun-

About four years ago, when so afflicted, I was advised to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and to lay all other remedies aside. I did so, and within a week was well of my cold and cough. Since then I have always kept this proparation in the house, and feel comparatively secure."

Senator Fassett and his colleagues objected to what they considered an assumption of authority on the part of Mr. Stokes, and the bickering over the bill followed.

It had been agreed by the World's Fair Committee that there should be 100 commissioners, but in the copies of the bill brought to Albany by Mr. Stokes, there were 103 names.

One of the extra three has been identified as a clerk in a Twenty-third street store, and all three are supposed to be personal friends of Mr. Stokes, upon whom he desired to confer the honor.

the mystery of Banker Joseph C. Ditman's disappearance is solved, though just how he came to his death, whether by accident or suicide, will probably near be known. The Coroner's fury, getting together at noon to-day, expected to find no evidence of four play.

The body was found under the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge two miles below where Mr. Ditman is supposed to have been drowned. It was still chyelogical in the long fur-trimmed driving cost. All the banker valuables were intact and the body was wonderfully well preserved.

There was a three-prouged wound in the crown of the head, which had injured the skull, and which caused the drawned man's relatives to conjecture that the bottom of a passing canal boas had caught him and drawing canal boas had caught him and that the body, freed there, had remained user the dam ever since.

After the inquest the family have arranged that there shall be no funeral, public or private. The long will simply be taken from the charge of the Coroner's officials and questly buried.
